about

We are against prisons and the society that creates them. We are against the state in its many forms and we are against domination. We call ourselves anarchists, but do not feel limited by that descriptor. And we're looking for friends.

Our effort in publishing these texts is to find others that may feel similarly. Of reaching out to those whose thoughts reverberate at a similar frequency as ours. This is not to push an agenda, political program or ideology, we reject all such things. But to display a tendency and to ask questions about how this tendency aligns itself with others. This is an attempt to find others with the similar drives and determinations.

This is not a books to prisoners program, and there is no hint of a liberal abolitionist or reform agenda. The want is to discuss the things close to our hearts with other combatants, regardless of how many walls separate us.

Pamphlets are always free to prisoners. And all prices listed are merely a suggestion. Please send a letter with what texts you would like and we will fill that request as we have the resources to do so. Letters are appreciated, but please remember that we are not a dating or pen-pal program and that any hints of racism, sexism, homophobia or other elements of the State and domination will be confronted.

carbonia (we were all communists)
by nanni balestrini

Nanni Balestrini, author of the intoxicating and maddening novel The Unseen, returns with yet another brilliant piece about class struggle in Europe. After a period of internment at a Nazi prison camp, Balestrini's narrator takes a job as a miner in the town of Carbonia -- from Germany to Italy to Australia, Balestrini's narrator remembers fighting with comrades against Nazi prison guards, cops, bosses, and scabs.

towards the queerest insurrection

From the pamphlet...“Queer is not a stable area to inhabit. Queer is not merely another identity that can be tacked onto a list of neat social categories, nor the quantitative sum of our identities. Rather, it is the qualitative position of opposition to presentations of stability—an identity that problematizes the manageable limits of identity. Queer is a territory of tension, defined against the dominant narrative of white-hetero-monogamous-patriarchy, but also by an affinity with all who are marginalized, otherized, and oppressed...”

dangerous identities

an argument against the ‘Identity’ in Identity Politics

This is an argument against identity politics, but it is not an argument against feminism, or queer liberation, or anti-racism work. It is instead an argument that the oppressions usually combated through identity politics - a strategy based on the affirmation of identity - could be better fought through its abandonment, or in the least through a radical destabilization of existing identities

against the airport and its world

In 2008, a 580 million euro airport project in western France was formally approved, and the state escalated its efforts to begin construction. The area became known as Zone à défendre, the “zone to defend,” and in August 2009, inhabitants launched a call for occupation of the zone. Demonstrations and actions against the planned airport multiplied. The texts that follow were written by people living in the ZAD, and by militants elsewhere in France, mainly during the months from October to December 2012, when the struggle on the ground in the zone reached unforeseen intensities.

avalanche

“... this publication is also intended as a tool, more precisely that of providing a space to nourish the international debate between anarchists. That is why these particular pages create space for struggles that spring from anarchist activities; autonomous, direct and self-organized struggles; struggles that go towards the destruction of power in all its forms; struggles happening today, yesterday or that are announcing itself.”
